The editor of the Veoman assures us. in a ve ry dignified manner, it at the convention on the eighth must show that they have no confidence in the ass cants of Gen. Butier, who are en gaged in schemes of speculation; and that Gen eral Butler don't date his democracy at 1844

We certain'y admire the lofty digni'y and su perculous insidence of all this. It's true that Genera But er d n't date his dem cracy at 1844, nor dies Blair, Benton, Van Buren, cr -last, if not least-the editor of the Yeoman They are o d democrats, or democrats of old. The three lormer are pretty well known, and the last snot together u known in Kentucky. Some men's democracy is like old wine-all the bet er for ag .. But experience proves that other nen's democracy ruits out in time. Our opponents depend in recruit g their ranks from the scans of men. Mr. Tanner, when he left the Yeoman a few years ago, in his lare well address told his read ers that his attachments to party were so far one tis be was hardly suited for the editoria tr pod of a party organ. We don't give hi words, in the base not stated the idea stronger than bed 1. His co rs- since has fully con firme what he said. The democratic party in this Sae be eve be told the truth in that farewed addres, and the' what I - aid of hims-

Language, to an in, the paryon the Logulante appier of en to b go one way and Louis XIV is r ported to have aid, "The State, the Ye an a ctuer. His position is ratler that's I." but when a man like B nton or Van the equivical to allow him to assume all the Buren says, "The party, that's I," the party is dgmry in the world, and deriver lectures as to very apt to repudiate rum, and it is rangerous the dan clacy of oth 1. His endorsement for any man to lang on to his skirts. will not go for with the 'emocra', e party. He is an old d m cra'; b ' a wise man has said, "that which sold decayeth, and is ready to venis away." .Ir. Tauner has once confesse that that is the cale with his demicracy, and we beneve t, as we ate in outy bound, from Leer Cour'esv, as de 'rom a gool many facts' we mild s ale to confirm it.

He is we engaged in a fiere condict, not for the position of the party, but for a man- 1 ed tor of the Yeoman havenga ed in a busines-

Our skirts are clear of such a sin. We have urged no personal considerations. We can as sure the editor of the Yeoman and his associ as lofty a tone as they please. They are a very lofty people; but the people of the South, and the democracy of this Commonwealth, will bring them to explanations before they are done-Old establishments generally die of dignity, and so do oid politicians sometimes.

We were pleased to see that the demodiffered widery with him 'on local matters ple, and shall take the liberty of treating any democrat the same way. This error, however, sound democrat, and in all important contests scared. Had he been elected, Kentucky would have Lad an able and reliable Senator.

We make this statement to counteract an impression that there is a division in the democratic party here of a grave sort. If there be such a one, we know nothing of it. The democratic party here may dispute about local matters as much as they please; but they will doesn't other justice, and not forget their principles or men on account of it.

Whigery—Democracy.—The Indiana Journel (whig) asks:

Is the "yoke or oppression" endured by the Hungarians heavier than that endured by easlaved Arroans in the saveholding States?
Will the Sentinel answer?

The Sentinel (democrat) replies:

It is all a matter of taste and education. Our sympathies are for white men—Mr Defrees's for the niggers. There is no accounting for taste; but this is a free country, and Mr. Defrees has an unquestionable right to love a nigger better than a white man, and we have not and shall not inquire the reason.

Iller . pondence of the Louisville Democrat.] WASHINGTON, Dec. 22, 1851. Mesers. Ed.tors: Gen. Sam Hauston spoke o-day rather against the compromise resoluious of Gen. Foote, and a number of free-s ilers from both houses were gathered round him o watch the effect of his speech. As soon as he had finished, Foote rose, and gave the Senator from Texas such a castigation as will last that gentleman for some time. He called him an intriguer, a demagogue, and heaven only knows what, which Sain tried to turn into ridi ule by teling anecdotes; but it would not an swer. o, Gen. Cass? What shall Pennsylvania say, which has just elected Col Bigler on the compromise? Shall tion. the Keystone follow again the lead of David Wilmot, who has horsted the Butler flag? Gen. Senator Foote left he Senate on Monday eve ning, and the city on yesterday for Mississippi. Before he went he set the ball of slavery agithat time was taken up in the effort to elect a U. S. Senator, or rather to reconcile the squabbles of the whig party, it is no difficult matter to account for the necessity for the prolongation of the session, nor will the people fail to place the responsibility of the act upon the right shoulders.

On Tuesday, in the House, when the order of the day, the election of a U. S. Senator, was announced, Mr. Boles appealed from the decision of the chair deciding the motion, in order to inform the Senate that the house was ready to proceed with the election. He took the ground in the first place that the two houses had had no joint action upon the subject, and in the notes of the organizing a "Union party." The feathers

O o of the entropy of the Malling War in the Malling of the P. 17

The celebrated Viscount Turrene, in his earlier youth, was a man of pleasure in the innocent sense of that word; it was his constant maxim, that man was formed for two purposes, to be virtuous and to be happy. He did not confine the latter term within the limits of any philosophical theory -he understood happiness as the world, and not as the phiosophers understood it. Being of a gay disposition, he gave it free vent; and the levities of his youth were as much the subject of conversation, as the heroism of his maturer years has become the theme of history.

Like many others of that period, the father of Turrene was persuaded that his son would make his fortune at Paris, but with that kind of blindness not uncommon to parents, he expected this dezired event by means very little suited his pocket, the voung Turrene was cunduc ed by his father to the town nearest his paternal chiteau, whence the good old gentlem in saw his sun safely into a provincial tage, and with in my blessings left hom on his road to Paris.

Turrenc, when a few miles on his road, got into conversation with a fellow-passinger; and there being in the vehicle but this gentleman and h mself, they suon became as much acquainted as if they had passed the whole of their lives logither. Turrente himself was always noted for his candor and pleasantry, and the young Chevalier, his fellow-passenger, seemed much of the same FREIGUTS for PULL & DET. PHIA NEW character. There were no limits, therefore, to their mutual confidence. Turrene entered into a narrative of his expeciations; and his companion, equally communicative, informed Turrene of ail the ci cumstinces of his situation.

Turrine is ned by this detail that the traine of his companion was the Chevaluer Dupaty; that he was the son of an old cit zon of Blois, and was going to Paris on a visit to a merchant, the old friend of his father, with the purpose of marrying the old gentleman's daughter Old Monsieur Dupaty and the Parisian merchant had, it seems, been educated together; and though so separated by the events of their future life, they had mulually relined that affectionate remembrance not uncommon in the situations. The o'd merchant, whose name is given as Monsieur St. George, had therefore sent an invitation to Monsieur Dupaty, to endeavor to unite their families; expressing in the same letter what he would give with his daughter, and what he should expect the young Dupaty would bring with him. 'I'he letter concluded, that if old Dipaty agreed to the proposal, the young Chevalier should be son, with a bag of 500 crowns, and the nuptials be forthwith concluded. "Have you never seen your intended.

Chevalier!" said Turrene. "Never," replied the young Dupaty. "Nor the old gentleman?" rejoined Turrene.

"Never, my friend," re-added the Che valier.

"It will be a singular union, then." said Turrene; "but perhaps these things are not so much the worse for being done blindfolded; fortune may choose perhaps as well as ourselves."

In this conversation between the young friends, passed the whole interval of the journey till their arrival at Paris. It was then agreed between the two companions, that they should stop at the same inn. But scarcely had they reached this inn, and were left alone in their chamber, when a very unexpected incident occurred. The young Dupaty was seizoccurred. The young Dupaty was seizof the following goods, viz.
Ladies, end gents, Gord Hunting Watches, full jewed with a violent and dangerous complaint. Whether arising from the journey, or from any other cause, the disease was so severe, and instantaneous in its effect, that Turrene had scarcely time to call for aid before his companion had expired.

There is a help for everything but death. Turrene retired to his bed, and revolved the incidents of the day, and his journey. He was then at an age when the sprit of mischief is supposed to predominate. Turrene rose in the morning, and going to the trunk of the deceased Chevatier, the keys of which Dupaty had given him previous to his unhappy catastrophe, he examined the content-; and taking the ictters and the bag containing the five hundred crowns, sallies furth for the house of Monsieur St. Genrae, having given previous orders for the bornal of his friend. It may be here necessary to mention, that, by the regulation of Paris, every one was reguired to be buried within twelve hours after their decease.

On coming to the house of Monsieur St. George, Turrene ordered the porter to announce his arrival to his master. "Who am I to announce, sir," said the

"The Chevalier Dupaty." The porter had not lived in the family for nothing; he knew the family secrets as well as Monsieur St. George himself. He eagerly, therefore, hastened to announce what he knew to be most agreeable intelligence. [Concusion in our next.]
